

FROM EURASIA TO AFRICA AN INTERCONTINENTAL WALK FOR WATER

Today, hundreds of villages and thousands of people in Africa aren't as close to the water as we are. They have to bring water from miles away to meet their most basic needs. Moreover, besides most of the time, this job is left to women.

According to UNICEF data, women and children all over Africa either walk 200 million hours a day or wait in long lines trying to reach the water. This figure corresponds to 8.3 million days or 22,800 years. This time lost every day is a matter not only for African women but also directly for our world.

As the Water Well Aid Association, we say, "Africa's, women and children have no time to lose." Our association, which is a member of the World Water Council (WWC), searches for traces of water all over the world, especially in the African continent, with its engineers who are experts in their fields. To date, we have carried out various water solution projects in Tanzania, Chad and Syria, we have laid kilometers of water network lines, and worked to provide water to thousands of people.

Our African female guests will be at the Eurasia Marathon on Sunday, November 7, to draw the attention of our country and the whole world to water and a continent that struggles with thirst. They will walk from one continent to another with their own buckets on their heads, as they do every day in their geographies. They will shout to the whole world that thirst is a human issue. This year, the road from Asia to Europe will pass through Africa!
